

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 1./2. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: insgesamt 5 Stunden

Die Aufgaben umfassen 6 Seiten

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Literary Composition

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuchs und der jeweiligen Textausgaben von William Shakespeares Romeo and Juliet, Harper Lees To Kill a Mockingbird bzw. Native American Short Stories gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind lediglich Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Text

BIG Trouble

*Obesity is spreading to parts of the world that once worried about getting enough to eat.
The health risks are as enormous as our waistlines.*

By Carla Power

The world has a weight problem. Within the past decade obesity rates have shot up by 50 percent, rising from 200 million people in 1995 to 300 million in 2003. Even places more familiar with famine than fat are starting to worry about their waistlines. Africa now has weight-loss clinics. In a recent survey in India - home to half the world's 5 undernourished population - 55 percent of women between 20 and 69 were found to be overweight. Brazil's childhood-obesity rate has jumped 239 percent in a generation - four times the growth rate for youth in the United States. This March, the International Obesity Task Force (IOTF) revealed that 1.7 billion of the planet's 6 billion people were overweight (with a weight-to-height-ratio - known as body mass index - over 25) or obese (with a BMI 10 greater than 30).

How did we all get so fat? The problem stems from the collision of a number of modern trends: rising affluence and urbanization; the proliferation of conveniences like cars, computers, fast food and television; and the 21st-century work culture, with its desk jobs and long hours. In rich countries, the familiar mantra of a low-fat diet and exercise is 15 routinely ignored. In the developing world, where health education is frequently nonexistent, people are particularly vulnerable to the glamour of American burgers and the comforts of the couch. Rural migrants to cities are suddenly confronted with market-stall snacks and McDonald's. In newly industrialized countries, packaged foods and fast-food chains are "promoted as an index of affluence and of being part of the international jet set,"
20 notes Philip James, chair of the IOTF.

The democratization of foods high in fat, sugar and salt - combined with increasingly sedentary lifestyles - is creating what health experts call a "nutrition transition". And it's killing us. "We have brilliantly built an environment guaranteed to make people obese," says James. "We've designed a society that's guaranteed to make people unfit. And so the world is dying of fat-related illnesses." [...]

Nothing puts weight on a nation like the shift from an agricultural to an urban economy - a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia. A 1999 United Nations survey found that the number of overweight Chinese had jumped from 10 to 15 percent (an increase of 64 million people) in just three years. Chen Linnan, 57, recalls her days of hard labor. As a farmer, she spent all day rotating soil, plucking green beans and digging potatoes. Life was tough, but "I was healthy," she says. "I never had to see a doctor before the age of 45." In the '80s, as China began shifting to a market economy, Chen became a factory supervisor. Her rising income, combined with her husband's, allowed the couple to buy modern appliances. Rather than wringing clothes by hand, Chen got a washing machine. A refrigerator cut out the need for her daily walk to the shops. Television and air conditioning meant she spent hours lazing on the sofa, devouring sunflower seeds. Her farming weight - 45 kilos - spiked to 84. Today she spends a month each year in the hospital, under observation for diabetes and dangerously high blood pressure. [...]

In Brazil the poor used to fill up on beans, which provided iron and protein. But mass movement to the cities has meant that people eat fewer meals at home, says Augusto Bozza, general secretary of the Brazilian Society of Cardiology; beans and rice have given way to burgers and ice cream. "Obesity is an epidemic of progress," he says.

In some parts of the world, this "progress" has been so rapid that people have leapfrogged from famine to fat in a single generation. [...] In South African women, plumpness has always signified health, wealth and fertility. Over the last generation, fears of looking like a victim of AIDS - commonly known as "the slimming disease" - have reinforced the traditional respect for fat. Today about half of South African women - 59 percent of black women - are overweight or obese. [...]

50 The tough new climate has spooked food producers. Some are adding “healthy” items like water, juice and fresh vegetables to their portfolios. Last month Kraft announced a “global initiative to respond to obesity,” promising a reduction in sugar fat and serving sizes and the elimination of all in-school marketing. McDonald’s has added salads and fresh fruit to its menus.

55 It doesn’t hurt that food companies are increasingly being held accountable for the damage their products cause. In the United States last year, a public-interest-law professor and a group of students won a $12.5 million settlement against McDonald’s for failing to disclose that french fries contained beef fat. In Brazil a consumer-rights attorney has filed suits against Coca-Cola and the soft-drink maker Ambev to restrict aggressive marketing and force them to print health warnings on their labels. An April report from JPMorgan 60 warned food manufacturers of the risk of increased regulation and litigation. But the report tried to be encouraging, too. “Obesity concerns create a growth opportunity,” it said, for players that can reposition themselves in healthy products. At this rate, perhaps one day we’ll be able to order spinach on a whole-wheat bun at the drive-through window.

Abridged from NEWSWEEK (international edition), August 11, 2003

Annotations:

- mantra (l. 14): a word or phrase that is repeated again and again, especially during prayer
- to spike (l. 37): to increase quickly
- JPMorgan (l. 59): a leading global firm that advises businesses, enterprises or governments in financial matters

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Content

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions without, however, taking information from the parts you are to translate. Use your own words as far as possible.

1. What are the reasons for the growing rates of obesity as brought forward by the author? (about 6-8 sentences)
2. Summarize the Chinese woman Chi Linnan's life to illustrate how social change affects a person's weight and health.
(about 80 words)
3. Point out the food industry's responsibility for obesity and describe how it is currently adjusting its strategies under economic and legal pressure.
(about 6-8 sentences)

Form

4. Analyze the heading and the subheading for stylistic devices and elaborate on two additional formal aspects in the first paragraph to support the overall message of the text.

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German from line 21 ("The democratization of foods ...") to line 25 ("... dying of fat-related illnesses.") and from line 43 ("In some parts of the world ...") to line 48 ("... are overweight or obese.").

Teilaufgabe II: Literary Composition

Choose one of the following two topics.

Write about 400 words.

Topic 1 William Shakespeare: Romeo and Juliet

Demonstrate to what extent the plot of William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet is determined by both fate and free will.

Consider the characters of Romeo, Juliet and Friar Lawrence.

Topic 2 Harper Lee: To Kill A Mockingbird / Leslie Marmon Silko: Lullaby

Point out instances of injustice and ethnic discrimination in To Kill a Mockingbird and Lullaby.

What chances of overcoming these ills are hinted at in the novel and the short story respectively?

Die Aufgaben umfassen 6 Seiten

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 1./2. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: insgesamt 5 Stunden

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Themaufgabe zur Literatur

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuches und der jeweils eingeführten Textausgaben (Tennessee Williams, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, Harper Lee, To Kill a Mockingbird und Native American Short Stories) gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind allenfalls Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Text

BIG Trouble

*Obesity is spreading to parts of the world that once worried about getting enough to eat.
The health risks are as enormous as our waistlines.*

By Carla Power

The world has a weight problem. Within the past decade obesity rates have shot up by 50 percent, rising from 200 million people in 1995 to 300 million in 2003. Even places more familiar with famine than fat are starting to worry about their waistlines. Africa now has weight-loss clinics. In a recent survey in India - home to half the world's undernourished population - 55 percent of women between 20 and 69 were found to be overweight. Brazil's childhood-obesity rate has jumped 239 percent in a generation - four times the growth rate for youth in the United States. This March, the International Obesity Task Force (IOTF) revealed that 1.7 billion of the planet's 6 billion people were overweight (with a weight-to-height-ratio - known as body mass index - over 25) or obese (with a BMI greater than 30).

How did we all get so fat? The problem stems from the collision of a number of modern trends: rising affluence and urbanization; the proliferation of conveniences like cars, computers, fast food and television; and the 21st-century work culture, with its desk jobs and long hours. In rich countries, the familiar mantra of a low-fat diet and exercise is routinely ignored. In the developing world, where health education is frequently nonexistent, people are particularly vulnerable to the glamour of American burgers and the comforts of the couch. Rural migrants to cities are suddenly confronted with market-stall snacks and McDonald's. In newly industrialized countries, packaged foods and fast-food chains are "promoted as an index of affluence and of being part of the international jet set," notes Philip James, chair of the IOTF.

The democratization of foods high in fat, sugar and salt - combined with increasingly sedentary lifestyles - is creating what health experts call a "nutrition transition". And it's killing us. "We have brilliantly built an environment guaranteed to make people obese," says James. "We've designed a society that's guaranteed to make people unfit. And so the world is dying of fat-related illnesses." [...]

Nothing puts weight on a nation like the shift from an agricultural to an urban economy - a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia. A 1999 United Nations survey found that the number of overweight Chinese had jumped from 10 to 15 percent (an increase of 64 million people) in just three years. Chen Linnan, 57, recalls her days of hard labor. As a farmer, she spent all day rotating soil, plucking green beans and digging potatoes. Life was tough, but "I was healthy," she says. "I never had to see a doctor before the age of 45." In the '80s, as China began shifting to a market economy, Chen became a factory supervisor. Her rising income, combined with her husband's, allowed the couple to buy modern appliances. Rather than wringing clothes by hand, Chen got a washing machine. A refrigerator cut out the need for her daily walk to the shops. Television and air conditioning meant she spent hours lazing on the sofa, devouring sunflower seeds. Her farming weight - 45 kilos - spiked to 84. Today she spends a month each year in the hospital, under observation for diabetes and dangerously high blood pressure. [...]

In Brazil the poor used to fill up on beans, which provided iron and protein. But mass movement to the cities has meant that people eat fewer meals at home, says Augusto Bozza, general secretary of the Brazilian Society of Cardiology; beans and rice have given way to burgers and ice cream. "Obesity is an epidemic of progress," he says.

In some parts of the world, this "progress" has been so rapid that people have leapfrogged from famine to fat in a single generation. [...] In South African women, plumpness has always signified health, wealth and fertility. Over the last generation, fears of looking like a victim of AIDS - commonly known as "the slimming disease" - have reinforced the traditional respect for fat. Today about half of South African women - 59 percent of black women - are overweight or obese. [...]

50 The tough new climate has spooked food producers. Some are adding "healthy" items like water, juice and fresh vegetables to their portfolios. Last month Kraft announced a "global initiative to respond to obesity," promising a reduction in sugar fat and serving sizes and the elimination of all in-school marketing. McDonald's has added salads and fresh fruit to its menus.

55 It doesn't hurt that food companies are increasingly being held accountable for the damage their products cause. In the United States last year, a public-interest-law professor and a group of students won a $12.5 million settlement against McDonald's for failing to disclose that french fries contained beef fat. In Brazil a consumer-rights attorney has filed suits against Coca-Cola and the soft-drink maker Ambev to restrict aggressive marketing and force them to print health warnings on their labels. An April report from JPMorgan
60 warned food manufacturers of the risk of increased regulation and litigation. But the report tried to be encouraging, too. "Obesity concerns create a growth opportunity," it said, for players that can reposition themselves in healthy products. At this rate, perhaps one day we'll be able to order spinach on a whole-wheat bun at the drive-through window.

Abridged from NEWSWEEK (international edition), August 11, 2003

Annotations:

- mantra (l. 14): a word or phrase that is repeated again and again, especially during prayer
- to spike (l. 37): to increase quickly
- JPMorgan (l. 59): a leading global firm that advises businesses, enterprises or governments in financial matters

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Content

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions without, however, taking information from the parts you are to translate. Use your own words as far as possible.

1. What are the reasons for the growing rates of obesity as brought forward by the author? (about 6-8 sentences)
2. Summarize the Chinese woman Chi Linnan's life to illustrate how social change affects a person's weight and health.
(about 80 words)
3. Point out the food industry's responsibility for obesity and describe how it is currently adjusting its strategies under economic and legal pressure.
(about 6-8 sentences)

Form

4. Analyze the heading and the subheading for stylistic devices and elaborate on two additional formal aspects in the first paragraph to support the overall message of the text.

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German from line 21 ("The democratization of foods ...") to line 25 ("... dying of fat-related illnesses.") and from line 43 ("In some parts of the world ...") to line 48 ("... are overweight or obese.").

Fach: Englisch
Prüfungsart: 1./2. Prüfungsfach
Dauer: insgesamt 5 Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Teilaufgabe II

LITERARY COMPOSITION

Choose one of the following topics and write about 400 words.

Topic 1

Tennessee Williams, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof

"Something's not right! You're childless and my son drinks! ... She ... points at the bed. When a marriage goes on the rocks, the rocks are there, right there" (p. 36)
In this outburst Big Mama is alluding to the importance of sexuality in human relationships. Discuss the significance of love and sexuality for Brick and Maggie and for Big Daddy and Big Mama respectively.

Topic 2

Harper Lee, To Kill A Mockingbird; Leslie Marmon Silko, Lullaby

Point out instances of injustice and ethnic discrimination in To Kill a Mockingbird and Lullaby. What chances of overcoming these ills are hinted at in the novel and the short story respectively?

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: insgesamt 3½ Stunden

Die Aufgaben umfassen 5 Seiten

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Literary Composition

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuchs und der jeweiligen Textausgaben von William Shakespeares Romeo and Juliet bzw. Harper Lees To Kill a Mockingbird gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind lediglich Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Text

BIG Trouble

*Obesity is spreading to parts of the world that once worried about getting enough to eat.
The health risks are as enormous as our waistlines.*

By Carla Power

The world has a weight problem. Within the past decade obesity rates have shot up by 50 percent, rising from 200 million people in 1995 to 300 million in 2003. [...]

How did we all get so fat? The problem stems from the collision of a number of modern trends: rising affluence and urbanization; the proliferation of conveniences like cars, computers, fast food and television; and the 21st-century work culture, with its desk jobs and long hours. In rich countries, the familiar mantra of a low-fat diet and exercise is routinely ignored. In the developing world, where health education is frequently nonexistent, people are particularly vulnerable to the glamour of American burgers and the comforts of the couch. Rural migrants to cities are suddenly confronted with market-stall snacks and McDonald's. In newly industrialized countries, packaged foods and fast-food chains are "promoted as an index of affluence and of being part of the international jet set," notes Philip James, chair of the IOTF.

The democratization of foods high in fat, sugar and salt - combined with increasingly sedentary lifestyles - is creating what health experts call a "nutrition transition". And it's killing us. "We have brilliantly built an environment guaranteed to make people obese," says James. "We've designed a society that's guaranteed to make people unfit. And so the world is dying of fat-related illnesses." [...]

Nothing puts weight on a nation like the shift from an agricultural to an urban economy - a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia. A 1999 United Nations survey found that the number of overweight Chinese had jumped from 10 to 15 percent (an increase of 64 million people) in just three years. Chen Linnan, 57, recalls her days of hard labor. As a farmer, she spent all day rotating soil, plucking green beans and digging potatoes. Life was tough, but "I was healthy," she says. "I never had to see a doctor before the age of 45." In the '80s, as China began shifting to a market economy, Chen became a 25 factory supervisor. Her rising income, combined with her husband's, allowed the couple to buy modern appliances. Rather than wringing clothes by hand, Chen got a washing machine. A refrigerator cut out the need for her daily walk to the shops. Television and air conditioning meant she spent hours lazing on the sofa, devouring sunflower seeds. Her farming weight - 45 kilos - spiked to 84. Today she spends a month each year in the 30 hospital, under observation for diabetes and dangerously high blood pressure. [...]

The tough new climate has spooked food producers. Some are adding "healthy" items like water, juice and fresh vegetables to their portfolios. Last month Kraft announced a "global initiative to respond to obesity," promising a reduction in sugar fat and serving sizes and the elimination of all in-school marketing. McDonald's has added salads and fresh
35 fruit to its menus.

It doesn't hurt that food companies are increasingly being held accountable for the damage their products cause. In the United States last year, a public-interest-law professor and a group of students won a $12.5 million settlement against McDonald's for failing to disclose that french fries contained beef fat. In Brazil a consumer-rights attorney has filed
40 suits against Coca-Cola and the soft-drink maker Ambev to restrict aggressive marketing and force them to print health warnings on their labels. An April report from JPMorgan warned food manufacturers of the risk of increased regulation and litigation. But the report tried to be encouraging, too. "Obesity concerns create a growth opportunity," it said, for players that can reposition themselves in healthy products. At this rate, perhaps one day
45 we'll be able to order spinach on a whole-wheat bun at the drive-through window.

Abridged from NEWSWEEK (international edition), 11 August, 2003

Annotations:

- mantra (l. 6): a word or phrase that is repeated again and again, especially during prayer
to spike (l. 29): to increase quickly
JPMorgan (l. 41): a leading global firm that advises businesses, enterprises or governments in financial matters

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Content

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions without, however, taking information from the part you are to translate. Use your own words as far as possible.

1. What are the reasons for the growing rates of obesity as brought forward by the author? (about 6-8 sentences)
2. Summarize the Chinese woman Chi Linnan's life to illustrate how social change affects a person's weight and health.
(about 80 words)
3. Point out the food industry's responsibility for obesity and describe how it is currently adjusting its strategies under legal pressure.
(about 5-7 sentences)

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German from line 13 ("The democratization of foods ...") to line 19 ("... a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia.").

Teilaufgabe II: Literary Composition

Choose one of the following topics.

Write about 270 words.

Topic 1 William Shakespeare: Romeo and Juliet

Demonstrate to what extent the plot of William Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet is determined by both fate and free will.

Consider the characters of Romeo and Juliet.

Topic 2 Harper Lee: To Kill a Mockingbird

Point out instances of injustice and ethnic discrimination in To Kill a Mockingbird.

What chances of overcoming these ills are hinted at in the novel?

Die Aufgaben umfassen 5 Seiten

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule
Fach: Englisch
Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach
Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Themaufgabe zur Literatur

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuches und der jeweils eingeführten Textausgaben (Alan Ayckbourn, Between Mouthfuls, und Morton Rhue, The Wave) gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind allenfalls Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Teilaufgabe ITEXT*Lights out

Washington DC

Mention youth and crime in America these days and people think of massacres like the one at Columbine High School in Colorado four months ago. The reaction is understandable. Predictably, parents have been pushing for tighter gun-control laws. On September 11th, President Bill Clinton announced $100m in community grants aimed at reducing violence among young people. [...]

5

More controversially, towns across America have also been passing curfews to get their children off the streets at night. Last month, Cicero, a town near Chicago, passed a law – aimed at gang members – that would allow police to seize the cars of teenagers out too late. And just last week the most recent curfew came into force in Washington, DC. There, children aged 16 and younger have to be home by 11pm on weekdays, and by midnight at the weekends, though it does admit exceptions such as “work” and “church activities” (and also, curiously, lets children off if they cite their first-amendment rights¹). If parents are found negligent, they can be fined or punished themselves.

10

Washington’s crackdown is part of a broader national trend to tuck children into bed and out of harm’s way. Some 300 towns and cities now have some sort of curfew for minors, and the Justice Department has expressed its approval. Curfews sound tough, win votes and please anxious adults. [...]

15

But curfews are problematic. For a start some critics argue that curfews violate the constitutional rights of young Americans. There are precedents, of course, for forbidding minors to do some things that adults may do freely: it makes sense to stop them smoking and discourage them from drinking. But should they also be forbidden to go out for the late movie? The law is murky on this point, as the constitutional rights of minors are not clearly defined. [...]

20

¹ First Amendment : first addition to the US constitution, which, among others, grants people the right to assemble peaceably

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

- 25 Perhaps the most compelling argument against curfews is that there is no evidence that they work. Many boasts have been made by policemen and mayors, says Jeffrey Butts of the Urban Institute, a think-tank, but most of their curfews have merely been riding the wave of declining crime rates across America. He insists that there is no substantive research that shows a link between curfews and reduced crime. Indeed,
- 30 the most comprehensive study on the subject suggests the opposite. Mike Dales and Dan Macallair, the authors of that study by the CJCJ², found that counties that had strict curfews did not see a decrease in youth crime greater than those counties without such curfews. These findings held true for all sorts of crimes.

- Why, then, has juvenile crime been declining along with overall crime rates since the
- 35 mid-1990s? Social-policy experts are divided. Some argue that government efforts such as job-training and mentoring schemes, nudge errant teenagers back on the straight and narrow. Others think that the answer lies in the same sorts of measures, like community policing, that have been effective in bringing down adult crime. Still others argue that the biggest force driving down delinquency among young people
- 40 could be the country's remarkable economic boom: with jobs aplenty, crime is less attractive.

- Perhaps it should not be so surprising that curfews have little impact on crime rates. After all, most juvenile crimes have long been committed between 3pm and 8pm – the hours after school ends and before many parents come home. The main point of
- 45 curfews, it seems, is to make adults feel better.

(slightly abridged from The Economist, 18-09-1999)

576 words

² CJCJ: Centre on Juvenile and Criminal Justice

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Teilaufgabe I

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions in about 6 sentences each (without, however, taking information from the part you are to translate). Use your own words as far as possible.

1. Describe the curfews passed in Cicero and Washington, DC, respectively, and the purposes these measures serve.
2. What are the main arguments advanced by opponents of curfews?
3. How do different experts explain the present decrease in juvenile crime?

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German lines 1 to 3 ("Mention ... gun-control laws.") and lines 42 to 45 ("Perhaps ... feel better.")

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Seite 5
- letzte Seite -

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Teilaufgabe II

LITERARY COMPOSITION

Choose one of the following topics and write about 270 words.

Topic 1

In telling her mother that "The Wave is just a game" (page 55 line 8), Laurie tries to reassure her. Does the experiment really turn out to be "just a game" for Ben Ross, Robert Billings and Laurie Saunders, respectively?

Topic 2

In an interview Alan Ayckbourn said, "I don't think people should live with each other for too long". Do you think the author successfully dramatises this conviction in his short play Between Mouthfuls?

Die Aufgaben umfassen 5 Seiten

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Themaufgabe zur Literatur

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuches und der jeweils eingeführten Textausgaben (Ernest Hemingway, The Short Happy Life of Francis Macomber, und Alan Ayckbourn, Between Mouthfuls) gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind allenfalls Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für WiederholerTeilaufgabe I*TEXT*Lights out

Washington DC

Mention youth and crime in America these days and people think of massacres like the one at Columbine High School in Colorado four months ago. The reaction is understandable. Predictably, parents have been pushing for tighter gun-control laws. On September 11th, President Bill Clinton announced $100m in community grants aimed at reducing violence among young people. [...]

5

More controversially, towns across America have also been passing curfews to get their children off the streets at night. Last month, Cicero, a town near Chicago, passed a law – aimed at gang members – that would allow police to seize the cars of teenagers out too late. And just last week the most recent curfew came into force in Washington, DC. There, children aged 16 and younger have to be home by 11pm on weekdays, and by midnight at the weekends, though it does admit exceptions such as “work” and “church activities” (and also, curiously, lets children off if they cite their first-amendment rights¹). If parents are found negligent, they can be fined or punished themselves.

10

15 Washington’s crackdown is part of a broader national trend to tuck children into bed and out of harm’s way. Some 300 towns and cities now have some sort of curfew for minors, and the Justice Department has expressed its approval. Curfews sound tough, win votes and please anxious adults. [...]

20

But curfews are problematic. For a start some critics argue that curfews violate the constitutional rights of young Americans. There are precedents, of course, for forbidding minors to do some things that adults may do freely: it makes sense to stop them smoking and discourage them from drinking. But should they also be forbidden to go out for the late movie? The law is murky on this point, as the constitutional rights of minors are not clearly defined. [...]

¹ First Amendment : first addition to the US constitution. which, among others, grants people the right to assemble peaceably

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

- 25 Perhaps the most compelling argument against curfews is that there is no evidence that they work. Many boasts have been made by policemen and mayors, says Jeffrey Butts of the Urban Institute, a think-tank, but most of their curfews have merely been riding the wave of declining crime rates across America. He insists that there is no substantive research that shows a link between curfews and reduced crime. Indeed,
- 30 the most comprehensive study on the subject suggests the opposite. Mike Dales and Dan Macallair, the authors of that study by the CJCJ², found that counties that had strict curfews did not see a decrease in youth crime greater than those counties without such curfews. These findings held true for all sorts of crimes.

- 35 Why, then, has juvenile crime been declining along with overall crime rates since the mid-1990s? Social-policy experts are divided. Some argue that government efforts such as job-training and mentoring schemes, nudge errant teenagers back on the straight and narrow. Others think that the answer lies in the same sorts of measures, like community policing, that have been effective in bringing down adult crime. Still others argue that the biggest force driving down delinquency among young people
- 40 could be the country's remarkable economic boom: with jobs aplenty, crime is less attractive.

- Perhaps it should not be so surprising that curfews have little impact on crime rates. After all, most juvenile crimes have long been committed between 3pm and 8pm – the hours after school ends and before many parents come home. The main point of
- 45 curfews, it seems, is to make adults feel better.

(slightly abridged from The Economist, 18-09-1999)

576 words

² CJCJ: Centre on Juvenile and Criminal Justice

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Teilaufgabe I

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions in about 6 sentences each (without, however, taking information from the part you are to translate). Use your own words as far as possible.

1. Describe the curfews passed in Cicero and Washington, DC, respectively, and the purposes these measures serve.
2. What are the main arguments advanced by opponents of curfews?
3. How do different experts explain the present decrease in juvenile crime?

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German lines 1 to 3 ("Mention ... gun-control laws.") and lines 42 to 45 ("Perhaps ... feel better.")

Schriftliche Abiturprüfung 2004

Seite 5
- letzte Seite -

Schulform: Abendgymnasium / Freie Waldorfschule

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. bzw. 4. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: 3 ½ Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Teilaufgabe II

LITERARY COMPOSITION

Choose one of the following topics and write about 270 words.

Topic 1

E. Hemingway: The Short and Happy Life of Francis Macomber

"Beggar had probably been afraid all his life. Don't know what started it. But over now." (Wilson on page 66, lines 26 -27)

Put the quotation into the context of the story. Explain what Macomber has been afraid of and what his change is about.

Topic 2

In an interview Alan Ayckbourn said, "I don't think people should live with each other for too long". Do you think the author successfully dramatises this conviction in his short play Between Mouthfuls?"

Die Aufgaben umfassen 5 Seiten

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Fach: Englisch

Prüfungsart: 3. Prüfungsfach

Dauer: insgesamt 3,5 Stunden

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Teilaufgabe II: Themaufgabe zur Literatur

Erlaubte Hilfsmittel:

Den Schülerinnen und Schülern ist die Benutzung eines an der Schule eingeführten einsprachigen Wörterbuches und der jeweils eingeführten Textausgaben (Tennessee Williams, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, und Harper Lee, To Kill a Mockingbird) gestattet.

In den Textausgaben dürfen keine Notizen angebracht sein; erlaubt sind allenfalls Unterstreichungen und farbliche Markierungen.

Teilaufgabe I: Leseverstehen eines nicht-literarischen Textes

Text

BIG Trouble

*Obesity is spreading to parts of the world that once worried about getting enough to eat.
The health risks are as enormous as our waistlines.*

By Carla Power

The world has a weight problem. Within the past decade obesity rates have shot up by 50 percent, rising from 200 million people in 1995 to 300 million in 2003. [...]

How did we all get so fat? The problem stems from the collision of a number of modern trends: rising affluence and urbanization; the proliferation of conveniences like cars, computers, fast food and television; and the 21st-century work culture, with its desk jobs and long hours. In rich countries, the familiar mantra of a low-fat diet and exercise is routinely ignored. In the developing world, where health education is frequently nonexistent, people are particularly vulnerable to the glamour of American burgers and the comforts of the couch. Rural migrants to cities are suddenly confronted with market-stall snacks and McDonald's. In newly industrialized countries, packaged foods and fast-food chains are "promoted as an index of affluence and of being part of the international jet set," notes Philip James, chair of the IOTF.

The democratization of foods high in fat, sugar and salt - combined with increasingly sedentary lifestyles - is creating what health experts call a "nutrition transition". And it's killing us. "We have brilliantly built an environment guaranteed to make people obese," says James. "We've designed a society that's guaranteed to make people unfit. And so the world is dying of fat-related illnesses." [...]

Nothing puts weight on a nation like the shift from an agricultural to an urban economy - a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia. A 1999 United Nations survey found that the number of overweight Chinese had jumped from 10 to 15 percent (an increase of 64 million people) in just three years. Chen Linnan, 57, recalls her days of hard labor. As a farmer, she spent all day rotating soil, plucking green beans and digging potatoes. Life was tough, but "I was healthy," she says. "I never had to see a doctor before the age of 45." In the '80s, as China began shifting to a market economy, Chen became a factory supervisor. Her rising income, combined with her husband's, allowed the couple to buy modern appliances. Rather than wringing clothes by hand, Chen got a washing machine. A refrigerator cut out the need for her daily walk to the shops. Television and air conditioning meant she spent hours lazing on the sofa, devouring sunflower seeds. Her farming weight - 45 kilos - spiked to 84. Today she spends a month each year in the hospital, under observation for diabetes and dangerously high blood pressure. [...]

The tough new climate has spooked food producers. Some are adding "healthy" items like water, juice and fresh vegetables to their portfolios. Last month Kraft announced a "global initiative to respond to obesity," promising a reduction in sugar fat and serving sizes and the elimination of all in-school marketing. McDonald's has added salads and fresh fruit to its menus.

It doesn't hurt that food companies are increasingly being held accountable for the damage their products cause. In the United States last year, a public-interest-law professor and a group of students won a $12.5 million settlement against McDonald's for failing to disclose that french fries contained beef fat. In Brazil a consumer-rights attorney has filed suits against Coca-Cola and the soft-drink maker Ambev to restrict aggressive marketing and force them to print health warnings on their labels. An April report from JPMorgan warned food manufacturers of the risk of increased regulation and litigation. But the report tried to be encouraging, too. "Obesity concerns create a growth opportunity," it said, for players that can reposition themselves in healthy products. At this rate, perhaps one day we'll be able to order spinach on a whole-wheat bun at the drive-through window.

Abridged from NEWSWEEK (international edition), 11 August, 2003

Annotations:

- mantra (l. 6): a word or phrase that is repeated again and again, especially during prayer
- to spike (l. 29): to increase quickly
- JPMorgan (l. 41): a leading global firm that advises businesses, enterprises or governments in financial matters

WORKSHEET

A. Comprehension

Content

Use all the relevant information in the text to answer the following questions without, however, taking information from the part you are to translate. Use your own words as far as possible.

1. What are the reasons for the growing rates of obesity as brought forward by the author? (about 6-8 sentences)
2. Summarize the Chinese woman Chi Linnan's life to illustrate how social change affects a person's weight and health.
(about 80 words)
3. Point out the food industry's responsibility for obesity and describe how it is currently adjusting its strategies under legal pressure.
(about 5-7 sentences)

B. Translation

Translate into idiomatic German from line 13 ("The democratization of foods ...") to line 19 ("... a trend currently reshaping Africa and Asia.").

Fach: Englisch
Prüfungsart: 3. Prüfungsfach
Dauer: insgesamt 3,5 Stunden

Sonderaufgabe für Wiederholer

Teilaufgabe II

LITERARY COMPOSITION

Choose one of the following topics and write about 270 words.

Topic 1

Tennessee Williams, Cat on a Hot Tin Roof

"Something's not right! You're childless and my son drinks! ...She ... points at the bed. When a marriage goes on the rocks, the rocks are there, right there" (p. 36)
In this outburst Big Mama is alluding to the importance of sexuality in human relationships. Discuss the significance of love and sexuality for Brick and Maggie.

Topic 2

Harper Lee, To Kill A Mockingbird

Point out instances of injustice and ethnic discrimination in To Kill a Mockingbird. What chances of overcoming these ills are hinted at in the novel?